«In a Slumber»
Leo Okagawa

~~~~~

Teganuma is a marsh beside four cities in northern Chiba Prefecture. There are many fish and wild birds and we can observe them from a short distance. To make this piece, one day I did a field recording for about 30 minutes around the dawn. There was a quiet time and still little traffic then. While my recorder was working, I was listening to the sounds in a slumber.

Leo Okagawa is a sound artist in Tokyo, Japan. He started field recordings in 2014, and also started making multilayered collage works from elements such as recorded environmental sounds, analog noise, and electronic tones. He also works on an improvised performance since 2017. Using electronics what is also used in his creation process, he explores the structural possibilities of sound through the combination of simple tones.
